FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Discrimination and Hostile Work Environment

18. Corporate Defendants are "the world's largest retail gaming and trade-in destination for Xbox, PlayStation, and Nintendo games, systems, consoles & accessories." See https:// https://www.gamestop.com (last accessed August 3, 2026). The Corporate Defendants are a privately-owned master telecommunications agency with hundreds of retail locations across the country, including New York. Corporate Defendants operates over 2,200 physical stores globally with at least ten (10) located across the five boroughs of New York.

19. At all times herein, Individual Defendant acted for and on behalf of Corporate Defendants with the power and authority vested in her as an officer, agent, and employee of Corporate Defendants, and has acted in the course and scope of their duty and function as the District Manager.

20. Plaintiff was duly qualified for his position as an associate and keyholder for the Corporate Defendants. On many occasions, Plaintiff had to work ten (10) hour shifts without a break and even off the clock when Corporate Defendants were understaffed. Corporate Defendants relied significantly on Plaintiff who did not receive any disciplinary warnings or write-ups while employed.

21. Plaintiff reported to his manager, Jennifer Snyder ("Snyder"), and the District Manager, Rhonda Watson ("Watson"), while employed at the Corporate Defendants' Brooklyn location. Watson exercised supervisory authority over employees within the district, including Plaintiff, with respect to hiring, disciplining, scheduling, evaluating, promoting, and terminating employment.

22. Following his transfer to Brooklyn, Plaintiff met Julian Espinoza ("Espinoza"). Plaintiff informed Espinoza that he was interested in getting to know him more personally, but Espinoza responded that he was not gay. Plaintiff immediately ceased contact and did not show any further interest.

23. In or around early February 2026, Espinoza began to inform customers and managers that he wanted to beat the Plaintiff up. One of Plaintiff's friends overheard Julian threaten the Plaintiff in this manner and informed the Plaintiff who reported the conduct to Snyder and Watson and filed a report with Human Resources.

24. For weeks, Espinoza continued to threaten and speak maliciously about the Plaintiff. Espinoza repeatedly commented on Plaintiff's sexual orientation, stating "that gay this" and "this gay that," in a derogatory manner to antagonize Plaintiff. Espinoza also continued to threaten harming Plaintiff or having someone harm Plaintiff. Espinoza's harassment of Plaintiff extended to false accusations of mishandling a friend pro account to coworkers and customers, as well as false accusations that Plaintiff bad-mouthed Espinoza on the app, Grindr. Espinoza's pattern of harassment created a hostile work environment fueled by gossip and threatening behavior.

25. On or about February 12, 2026, Snyder disproved Espinoza's accusations regarding Plaintiff changing his friend pro account. The transactions in Espinoza's account were all under his employee number and occurred on dates that Plaintiff did not work the same shift, or at all.

26. On or about February 17, 2026, Plaintiff showed the texts revealed his Grindr texts to Snyder to prove that he had never mentioned Espinoza. Such false accusations were made to damage Plaintiff's reputation and get him fired by Watson, who was close friends with Espinoza and consistently defended him.

27. On or about February 19, 2026, Plaintiff overheard Espinoza shout "I don't want to work with [Plaintiff]" while on the phone with a friend visiting the store. Plaintiff's friend approached Espinoza to ask who he was referring to and why he was mad to which Espinoza responded that "he doesn't fuck with [Plaintiff]" and that he was going to "beat [Plaintiff's] ass the next day." Espinoza also stated he "got people to jump [Plaintiff] in two months" and "will try to get Plaintiff fired because he is tired if [him]."

28. On or about the end of February, Plaintiff encountered Shelly Pabos, Espinoza's close friend at work, when she requested that Plaintiff ask Espinoza if he was mad at her because she didn't want to ask him. Plaintiff informed Shelly that he did not want to be involved in between her and Espinoza. On this same day, Espinoza kept contacting Plaintiff to ask how to trade broken controllers for value, despite his obvious disdain for Plaintiff, to avoid speaking to Pabos. When Plaintiff informed Espinoza that he was improperly running the trade controllers through POS as opposed to Tech Trade which meant that customers would receive more money for the trade then the actual cost, Espinoza responded that he didn't care. Being forced between Espinoza and Pabos despite the documented conflict with Espinoza further distressed Plaintiff and contributed to a hostile work environment during his employment.

29. In or around early March 2026, Plaintiff learned from Snyder that Espinoza had been falsely accusing him of harassment and inappropriate workplace conduct. Snyder inquired whether Plaintiff had every hit on Espinoza, whether Plaintiff informed coworkers and/or customers that Espinoza was gay, whether Plaintiff had changed Espinoza's friend pro account phone number, and whether Plaintiff had ever bad-mouthed Espinoza on Grindr. Despite Snyder disapproving that Plaintiff had changed Espinoza's friend pro account and Plaintiff proving he had not mentioned Espinoza in his dating communications, Snyder still asked Plaintiff accusatory questions based on Espinoza's false claims.

30. Plaintiff truthfully informed Snyder that he had shown interest in Espinoza on only one occasion after Espinoza shared with Plaintiff that he was paid to have sex with a husband and wife. As a result, Plaintiff reasonably believed Espinoza may be interested in men. Espinoza shared this story with Stephanie Adams ("Adams"), who Espinoza had previously shown interest in, and Snyder, who advised him that the story was inappropriate for work and not to discuss it again.

31. Plaintiff also informed Snyder that Espinoza lied about Plaintiff informing coworkers and/or customers that he was gay. Prior to Plaintiff's transfer to Corporate Defendants' Brooklyn location, Espinoza was frequently referred to as "gay" by customers. Following Plaintiff's transfer, a customer stated, "[I] don't like the gay guy who looks like he likes little boys," and when Snyder asked the customer whether they were referring to Plaintiff, the customer responded, "the one with the piercings in his mouth," referring to Espinoza. Plaintiff informed Snyder he had no part in how customers perceived Espinoza as they had referred to him as "gay" prior to Plaintiff working with him.

32. On or about March 2, 2026, Human Resources Investigator Diana LNU contacted Plaintiff about his complaint. She advised him that there was an active investigation ongoing and to not mention it to coworkers or customers at the store. She also advised Plaintiff to ignore Espinoza and that she would get back to him.

33. On or about March 20, 2026, Espinoza was terminated due to "workplace violence" with Snyder serving as a witness to his threats against Plaintiff. After his termination, Espinoza cursed Plaintiff out for allegedly getting him fired.

34. On or about March 21, 2026, Plaintiff was terminated for allegedly sexually harassing Espinoza via text messages. During the termination meeting, the reason for Plaintiff's termination shifted between sexual harassment and disorderly conduct without evidence for either allegation. Plaintiff vehemently denied the false accusations, but Corporate Defendants followed through with his termination and promised to send all documentation related to Plaintiff's termination to him by March 23, 2026. To date, Plaintiff has not received any such paperwork.

35. Following his termination, Plaintiff texted Watson to ask why he was being terminated when she had knowledge that Espinoza's allegations were false. Watson responded, "you people are always so problematic and dramatic. Move on and live with your sin. You are no longer part of GameStop, so I don't care. Just go away and get right with God." From these statements, Plaintiff reasonably understood that Watson was making derogatory remarks regarding his sexuality and the LGBTQ community as a whole. Her response supports Plaintiff's claim that his termination was retaliation for his complaints about sex-based discrimination and harassment as a result of Plaintiff's sexual orientation.

36. In taking, or failing to take, action, Defendants acted with malice, reckless and callous indifference to federal, state, and local anti-discrimination laws, which it knew, or should have known of, and, through its course of conduct, caused Plaintiff to suffer emotional injuries.

37. Defendants discriminated against Plaintiff based on his sex, and specifically his sexual orientation, and by creating a hostile work environment and directly discriminating against him.

38. Defendants used alleged sexual harassment and/or disorderly conduct against Plaintiff as a pretext to terminate his employment, even though he had never been previously warned or disciplined for either allegation.

39. As a result of Defendants' unlawful discriminatory acts against Plaintiff, he has suffered, and will likely continue to suffer, significant economic consequences, including lost back and front wages, loss of self-esteem, as well as physical, mental, and/or emotional distress.

40. As a result of Defendants' unlawful discriminatory acts against Plaintiff, he has suffered and continues to suffer impairment and damage to his good name and reputation.

41. As a result of the Defendants' unlawful discriminatory acts against Plaintiff, he has suffered and continues to suffer severe and lasting embarrassment, humiliation, and anguish, and other incidental and consequential damages and expenses.
